The Muffins boys are excitable and happy. They are eager to love and be loved. They do not show a real concept of understanding boundaries at this point but when trained appropriately they have qualities that could make them very special companions and or working dogs.

Blue was very cautious when put in new environment. Slow to warm up. Once he felt comfortable he was very persistent to gain the attention from tester.
Lacks manners but will bond hard and fast.

Blue dot is confident in new situations. Worked hard to maintain testers attention. Green is confident

Green and blue dot are both middle of the road puppies. They demonstrated a balance of content to play on their own and engaging with others.

Green has the cutest play hops you will ever see.

Green dot is very happy and excited about everything. Play, interaction, getting and giving love. Like his brothers, He also lacks manners but has huge potential.
Good confidence and good focus.

Orange was vocal when unsure. He wanted to do everything, but wasn't quite sure how to insert himself. His little whimpers were cute, but signified his insecurity of not knowing what to do in unfamiliar situations.

Entire litter is mouthy and "pawsey".
They use both to explore and get attention.

They were all squirmy to hold when they were in "play" mode. But once they all had good energy burns, they wanted to settle in close to you.

The litter as a whole liked toys but was more motivated by physical touch and human interaction.

It would be a missed opportunity to not train the little smarties appropriately to really see their full potential.
