ORANGE was unsure of new sights, sounds and environment. He explored with caution. Wanted to engage but wasn't sure how to. He would whimper when he felt a little insecure. This will go away as confidence increases.

He would look on with curiosity and then decide if it was safe to join in. Nervous but eager.

Loved being held and cuddled.

BLUE like most of his siblings was unsure at first but his level of confidence increased pretty quickly.

He was very intrigued by weird objects (a fan) and noises. He would move in to investigate. Very curious.

Has good focus. He will be a fun one to train.

GREEN is cautiously curious but excited about new sights and sounds.

He's all boy in his play as he likes to roll his siblings. Jumping and tumbling is a lot of fun for him.

He is a monkey see, monkey do puppy. If it looks like fun then he's going to do it too.

Overall the litter was a bit immature.

Some behaviors like whining, hiding and scratching are related to insecurities. These will change as they mature and build confidence.

They are heavily focused on being rough and tumble with each other right now as that is what is familiar and comfortable to them.

Proper socialization training will be great for their confidence and bonding with people.

Because of their curious nature and good focus they should train very easily and effectively.
