PINK - She's a little shy. Sweetly shy. If you give her a minute and your interactions are calm and gentle, then she welcomes the affection.

She could get overwhelmed with too busy of a household at this time. As she matures and confidence builds through positive interactions her timidness will decrease.

She wants affection and attention but needs to feel safe.

She will bond easily once she has that trusting relationship with her person.

She could be a great candidate for someone needing one on one companionship or a retired household.

RED - she has good confidence and appropriate puppy behavior for this age.

She is nice to be around and isn't "too much" puppy. Her sister white can get her engaged in excited play but then she also is content to entertain herself with toys or exploring independently.

She loves one on one attention and is good with handling.

She has a cute curious nature and explores with caution. But she wants to figure things out. Adorable to watch.

She should do well in most home environments.

WHITE - She and her brother green were cut from the same mold! Very confident, fun and ready for anything.

Personal space is out the window because she so desperately wants to be friends. She will work hard to get your attention and makes sure everyone is having a good time.

Just like green, she shows great marker behaviors for a potential service candidate.

She brings the joy to the room.

I'd not given the opportunity to train and utilize her smart and engaging tendencies, she could get board and mischievous.

She will be a dynamic puppy when matched appropriately.
