Pink - she was sheepishly shy to start but very sweet. I wouldn't say fearful because she really wanted to be involved but was cautious of how to engage.

She followed her big sister's lead and that helped her to participate faster. Very sweet in her interactions. She could get overwhelmed if it's too much too soon, but will adjust quickly if given the right environment to do so. She loved playing with toys and figuring things out. She's a cute little thing. No red flags and will be a nice companion.

Red - she was eager from the start and had a lot of want to but still needed reassurance that it was OK. She became more more interactive as her confidence increased. She loved getting attention and affection. Good with handling. She will be a nice middle of the road puppy with just a little more maturing. Sweet happy girl mid-level energy. No red flags just needs time to adjust without being overwhelmed.

White - very unsure to start. Was only comfortable in the testers lap and was not interested in venturing out on her own.

She gained confidence by observing from a distance and pacifying herself with a toy.

It was sweet, watching her, build her confidence and push herself a little more each time.

She ventured out with caution, but you can tell she was letting herself have a good time. She's a very sweet puppy, but could get overwhelmed if it's too much too soon. Just a little confidence boosting training will do her wonders. She is a sweet and loving puppy so we want to make sure that we build on those attributes with positive reinforcement.
