Red - potential service candidate. Very happy and playful. She does not have fearful or timid tendencies. She does not like to be left alone which is in line with a service temperament. She does not have personal boundaries and is persistent to gain your attention and affection. Silly and fun. Her motivation level is great for training. She will be excited to learn because she wants that one on one attention. With proper guidance and social skills she will be able to do gray things in the service or therapy realm.

Pink - very similar temperament to red.

Happy and confident. She has a touch more independence than red but also has the potential to train for great opportunities.

She has good focus and the right energy level for it.

She could get bored of not given the opportunity to use her smarts. She is aware of movement and noise and looks to engage with both.

Good with handling.

White - she has a mid-level energy and has a great balance of being able to play independently and engage socially. Not a super needy puppy but still enjoys being interacted with and will accept attention and affection. Transitioning her into a new family dynamic should be easy as she is not overly needy or overly independent. A great middle of the road puppy.

Pink dot - Very insecure in new situations. She was nervous but curious throughout the evaluation.

We will give her a little more time to build confidence and adjust and then reevaluate. She was not interested in interacting, but also didn't seem like she was too fearful. Just uninterested. Will revisit soon.

Still good with handling though.
